But first...

When is Mother's Day?

Mother's Day in Australia is always the second Sunday in May. This year, that date is the 14th of May. But don't fret – you've still got plenty of time to plan what to cook for Mother's Day 2023.

Eggs benedict tarts with crispy prosciutto

It's a crowd favourite and brunchtime staple. But we've added a twist to the traditional eggs benedict: a tart base. Let Mum marvel in the golden goodness of baked pastry and the crunch of crispy prosciutto. And the best bit? It can be whipped up in under an hour using NEFF's CircoTherm® Intensive function. Bonus points if you serve this dish to Mum in bed!

Vanilla spiced baked rice pudding with orange compote

If your Mum has a sweet tooth, this rice pudding recipe is a must. With tastes of chai, vanilla and orange, it perfectly balances sugar and spice. And while it may typically be served as dessert, we think Mother's Day is the perfect excuse to eat it for brunch!

Baked eggs and beans

It's hearty, tasty and easy to prepare, making this baked eggs and beans combo an instant winner. Using mostly pantry items, impress your special person with a rich tomato sauce, lots of spice and a crunchy piece of sourdough on the side. It's so good it could be served for breakfast at the local café!

Carrot cake roll with cream cheese and candied walnuts

This carrot cake recipe is a little savoury and a little sweet – but mostly yum! It's also fun to make – so if your Mum or special person enjoys baking, why not give it a go together! With a smooth cream cheese filling and sprinkles of cinnamon, nutmeg and orange rind, this recipe is best served for with a hot cup of tea or coffee. Don't forget to serve with candied walnuts for extra crunch!
