

Our Favourite Recipes You Can Cook Using a Steam Oven

Have you been looking for ways to let off steam in the kitchen? Get busy with these moisture-locking recipes.

Cooking has come a long way since grandma's day. We have probes that can cook our meat to perfection and induction that can outperform gas-fired hobs.

One technological advancement growing in popularity is cooking with steam – not via colander and boiling water but using a special oven with VarioSteam or Fullsteam features.

Steamed food retains more vitamins and minerals than fried, baked, or even boiled food, and stays plump rather than going oily and crispy. Intrigued? These recipes will prove to you why this cooking method is as good as it steams.

Steamed Cod

Anyone who has smoked a fish knows that seafood loves indirect heat. A little different from the smoked version, this juicy cod is served in a soup. You'll need to mix a pickling liquid from five or six green beans, half a chilli, rice vinegar, palm sugar, and a teaspoon of salt. Then, steam the cod fillet using Fullsteam for eight minutes before frying off the soup toppings. The whole dish should only take around 40 minutes.

Individual Steamed Cheesecakes

The maple cake is guaranteed to get messy, so we understand it's not your first choice when having company over. These individual steamed cheesecakes, however, are a great cocktail dessert.

A mixer will do all the work. Put in cream cheese and sugar, leave until smooth, and then add in cornflower and eggs before a touch of lemon juice, vanilla, and sour cream. Dollop the mix into 10 preserving jars of around 125mls, cover the lids (but don't seal), and then cook on Fullsteam at 90°C for 16-18 minutes. The crumb then comes from biscuits and melted butter.

If you needed something easy, delicious, and impressive to convey the benefits of a steam oven, these cakes have what you need.
